THE NEW CARPETBAGGERS

BY STEVEN SAINT

Soon after Robert E. Lee handed over his sword at Appomattox, Republicans from the North went in search of fame, fortune and political change in the Democratic South. Some of these Northerners became wealthy. Some were elected governor in southern states.

Southern Democrats still stinging from the Civil War called them "carpetbaggers," the antebellum equivalent of "bag ladies."

Some historians argue that the carpetbaggers did the South a whole lot of good: the party of Lincoln needed to bring progressive ideas to post-slavery Democrats. They helped write enlightened constitutions, equalized the tax codes and rebuild southern infrastructure.

Regardless, spin doctors made them look like opportunistic outsiders and the name "carpetbagger" still sounds bad.

California election laws preclude carpetbagging. The Election Code states that people must register to vote where they actually live, and candidates and officeholders must live in the district they seek to govern. But the Election Code isn't printed on the back of voter registration forms and politicians frequently have their own definitions of residency.

Voters get to decide whether or not they like that.

"That's nobody's business."

– Carolyn Griffin
Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District Trustee

Carolyn Griffin serves on the Grossmont-Cuyamaca Community College District Board of Trustees. She was elected by a hefty margin in 1994 although she was virtually unknown and spent little money, a feat attributed by friends and foes alike to her presence on a three-candidate slate.

The slate was led by incumbent Rebecca Clark and included Dan DiNardo, who lost his race against Rick Alexander.

Griffin first appeared on the voter roles in San Diego County in early 1994, registered at an address on Langholm Road, near I-8 and Lake Jennings Park Road. She declared no political party affiliation and listed a mailing address on Balboa Avenue in Clairemont, a slot at Mail Boxes, Etc.

In August, 1994, she changed party affiliation to Democrat and took out papers to run for Clark's seat on the college board. Three days later she withdrew her candidacy and filed again, this time to run against incumbent Rochelle Bastien.

Her ballot book statement, filed with the candidate paperwork, was largely an attack on the board's "racial hiring goals" and was paid for by a personal check showing an address in Ventura, Calif.

Griffin is not registered to vote at the High Point Drive address given on the check, but she is listed in phone directories as a resident there with Donald Griffin, her father and owner of the property.

The High Point Drive address also appears on court documents in Ventura County, a small claims action filed last year involving back rent from a tenant on Rosewood Street. According to the files, Griffin herself was served papers at the Rosewood address for a suit initiated by the condominium association over unpaid fees.

But last weekend, Griffin was found at a third Ventura address, a rental on Van Buren Street only a couple miles from the Griffin house on High Point Drive. She was not interested in discussing the details of her monthly commutes to San Diego.

"That's nobody's business," she said Saturday. "My folks have both had heart attacks. I'm up here helping them out."

Whether Griffin is living in Ventura and commuting to East County or living here and commuting there is hard to ascertain. During a random three-week period last year, the house on Langholm Road was generally unoccupied, although Griffin did stay there directly after the trustees' bimonthly board meetings.

On Oct. 26 of last year, she hit two children while backing out of the driveway on Langholm. According to documents at the El Cajon Municipal Court, Griffin claims the 10- and 14-year-old boys were not hurt and were crossing the driveway carelessly. The boys' mother, Susan Auth, claims Griffin backed out recklessly, running over one boy's foot and giving the other a fractured arm and contusions.

The judge will decide who's telling the truth next month. Griffin may or may not show up: she failed to appear at the June hearing on the Rosewood Street matter in Ventura and missed a recent San Diego court appearance regarding her lapsed auto registration.

None of those questioned from the Board of Trustees or college staff could identify Griffin's employer or her line of full-time work. Conservative activist Jim Harnsberger said he knows her business but is not at liberty to discuss it. Beverly Clark (Rebecca's mother) said Griffin lives in the college district but few people actually know where.

"I know where she lives and Becky knows where she lives," said Clark, known for calling out voting instructions to Griffin from the audience of meetings early in Griffin's term. "But she is a very private person and doesn't want a lot of people knowing where she lives."

One person who doesn't know where she lives is Bob Walsh, the owner of the house in Lakeside where Griffin is currently registered to vote. Walsh said he's known Griffin for a couple of years, had dated her a while and even had plans to live together at his house on Vista Hills Place.

The plans changed, but Griffin asked Walsh if she could use his address, he said.

"She wanted to keep it here for political purposes, I think," he said Wednesday. "She was very, very secretive about her work. She said it was secret government work and was classified."

Walsh said he hasn't spoken to Griffin in months and doesn't know where she lives. He said in all the time he's known her, she never mentioned being from Ventura or caring for elderly parents.

"As far as I knew, she didn't have any living parents," he said. "She was pretty hush-hush about her past."

"Where I lived two years ago is nobody's business."

– Nadia Davies
Grossmont Union High School District Trustee candidate

Nadia Davies traces her decision to run for the Grossmont Union High School District Governing Board to a letter in this newspaper. Ruth Monroe of Lemon Grove sent a letter to the editor in February claiming she heard rumors that Davies wanted to run for the board. The letter more or less accused Davies and Jim Harnsberger of causing trouble in the district in order to gain a political foothold.

Davies replied swiftly with a letter stating she had not previously considered running for the Grossmont board, but would now mull it over.

In July, she and her husband Tom, a former Grossmont trustee and currently on the county Board of Education, registered to vote in the district.

The Davies have had four different registration addresses in as many years. In 1991, almost a year after Tom was elected to the Grossmont board, the couple registered to vote on Broadmoor Drive in La Mesa. In 1993, they registered on Dewane Drive in El Cajon.

In 1994, both Davies ran for school boards. Tom vacated his Grossmont seat and ran for the county board. Nadia ran for the San Diego Unified School District board. Tom maintained his voter registration in East County while Nadia registered in Del Cerro Heights, at the home they still own and where Tom registered after winning the county seat.

Now they are registered in La Mesa at a duplex near Lake Murray. The property is owned by Salameh Waleed, who has a mailing address in Mission Valley. According to the county voter list, Edovard LaPlante and Michael Paslay are also registered to vote at the Lake Murray Blvd. address.

Davies, however, doesn't believe residency is an issue.

"I live where I live, and where I lived two years ago is nobody's business," she said Tuesday. "I have a little apartment in La Mesa where I've been living the last three months and that's all that's required. I have my other house up for sale."

The Davies' propensity for movement prompted a May 1994 article in the Union-Tribune, which Nadia includes in her current campaign press kit. In the article, Davies stated she and her husband

Take time out for the arts

October is National Arts and Humanities Month. I urge all Lemon Grovers to mark the occasion by attending artistic events at area schools, clubs and churches, as well as in theaters, recital halls, libraries and other venues in the east county.

There are those who might say that the arts and humanities in Lemon Grove are dead. I would have to disagree and agree. Our great arts complex closed its doors and moved to Mission Valley. Its departure left a void as far as a performing dance troupe and an art gallery. However, music is alive in our town especially in the churches. Visit any of our places of worship on a Sunday and give your ears a treat. I recently spent a Saturday evening clapping and singing at Lemon Grove's newest church, the Greater Victory Baptist Church. Their services are held at 6:30 p.m. every Saturday at the First Baptist Church on Main Street.Everyone is welcome.

Our school district offers free music lessons to its students. Lemon Grove Middle School has a fine marching band. The area PTAs, in conjunction with the school district, offer various art activities to the students. Grossmont and Cuyamaca Community Colleges have art galleries, music recitals, orchestral presentations and drama productions on their campuses.

Engaging in cultural pursuits broadens our perspectives and brings grace and pleasure to daily life. If your schedule doesn't permit extended periods of time to enjoy an artistic pursuit, I suggest following the advice of our ever-stalwart Friends of the Lemon Grove Library - read. Stephen Gilbar's Reading in Bed: Personal Essays on the Glories of Reading will keep you entertained while waiting for an appointment or before turning out the light at night. Enjoy.

50 years celebrated

Bill and Elly Brown recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a mass at St. John of the Cross Church in Lemon Grove. They were married in Ohio and have resided in Lemon Grove for 40 years.

Bill is a World War II Navy veteran and a U.S. Postal Service retiree. They are blessed with six children, 14 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

slept in separate houses for the duration of the campaigns in order to comply with the state's legal requirements: he was registered in the Grossmont district to maintain his seat on the board and she was registered in the San Diego district in order to qualify as a candidate.

The article stated that the Davies own some 14 properties from which to choose at registration time.

Those property holdings do not include a house on Galena Street in El Cajon. Davies claimed residency there on a notice of intention to circulate recall petitions against three Grossmont trustees when they passed a controversial assessment last year. Davies gave the address of Cajon Valley School District Trustee Jill Barto as her own residence.

Davies whole signature line was then scratched through and an eleventh person — Carolyn Griffin — substituted a signature to validate the petition. (Griffin later denied signing the petition, suggesting someone had forged her signature.)

Unlike Griffin, Davies has been involved in East County education for over 20 years. She was named Teacher of the Year by both the Grossmont district and the county. She believes her ability to fix the Grossmont district — raising SAT scores, restoring arts and counseling programs, reviving a harmonious relationship between the district and the community — should count more than the location of her house.

"What does that have to do with anything?" she said. "You're trying to confuse things and I'm not going to discuss it. I'm running for the Grossmont district because I love the Grossmont district."

Modern carpetbagging — registering to vote someplace other than where you live, for political purposes — is fairly common. The trail can be followed by cross-referencing voter roles with tax assessor records.

Now-Assemblyman Steve Baldwin was elected to the Republican Central Committee in the 75th Assembly District in 1990 and was registered to vote in Imperial Beach. When he first ran in the 77th Assembly District against Tom Connolly in 1992, he registered to vote at his sister's home in El Cajon.

State Senator Steve Peace has lived in Rancho San Diego for over 20 years. But he was registered to vote in Chula Vista while representing the 79th Assembly District. Even though he now lives near the Cottonwood Country Club, in the 37th Senate District, he is registered to vote in the 40th Senate District, which he represents, at the home of his senior staff member, Shere Mann.

The state Election Code states that while a person may have several "residences," he or she has only one "domicile." Residences are temporary habitations — be they college dormitories or military bases — where a person may reside but does not intend to live permanently. The domicile is the place where a person's "habitation is fixed," where he or she intends to remain and where he or she intends to return after an absence.

Even though the voter registration card asks for a "residence" address, people are supposed to register to vote at their domiciles, said county Registrar of Voters Mikel Haas.

"Residency is a state of mind — almost. There are parameters," said Haas, whose domicile is in La Mesa. "You can re-register as many times as you want and change your domicile as many times as you want. But 'residence' for the purposes of voting means 'domicile.'"

Haas said California lawmakers have whittled away barriers to voting for decades, dropping any proof of residency or citizenship in favor of mail-in registration. The threat of perjury is now the only deterrent to fraudulent registration.

Haas said he could not comment on any specific candidate or officeholder, but generally speaking, people must take their residency requirements seriously.

"If a candidate is not physically there, has never lived there or established a presence there, has no intention of living there, her voter registration may be fraudulent," he said. "That would probably be something the district attorney would want to look at."

Cheryl Cohen, Greg Eichelberger, Howard Owens, Ninette Sosa and Mistie Shaw contributed to this report.

PG Perspectives

Words

by Phillip Giannangeli

Words. They are the single most important achievement in all of human history. Bar none. We humans would be the bottom rung on the evolutionary ladder without language. We probably would have become extinct by now. And, without those words, the only record of our having been here might be a dented skull or a smashed patella. Not just as a record of our existence, but every aspect of our being revolves around words, words, and words.

From the very beginning, words have been the cornerstone of our civilization. They have the capacity to start wars. Or to end them. They can bring unparalleled joy or unimagined grief. The right words heal; the wrong ones wound. Our first words are cherished, our last ones may go unnoticed. For some, words are daunting; for others they are the lubricant of life. Ah, words.

Now that the pontificating about words has put you in a reflective stupor, let's look at the fun side of words. And I think that beyond life and death, war and chaos, words can be fun. And they'd better be or else this column has just ended.

Imagine man's (human kind's) first words. Perhaps they were similar to those uttered by babies when they first begin to speak: Goo, goo—da, da. Perhaps not. The first words spoken might have been in response to something traumatic. A chase where one party (the one with the capacity for speech even if unrecognized at the time) is fleeing the other party (the one with huge fangs and a voracious appetite). I can almost hear breathless comments such as "Yeeks!" "Ip!" (an abbreviated version of today's cry for assistance), or "Oh, ..."

Having successfully eluded his attacker, I see this early representative of our club bursting with the urge to share his success with his fellow appetizers. He might have even come upon a unique way to incapacitate his tormentor. Imagine not being able to communicate that. Pictures might help, but there certainly was a need for something more immediate: words.

"Ug. Barney. Dead meat!"

As language developed, the need to find a way to keep track of what words would fit what deeds surfaced . Language grew with each new adventure in nature and eventually all those words had to be written down and written language developed. Then sometimes, battles over words would replace battles over other things in the lives of early people.

Down through the centuries, words did more and more of what they accomplished in the first place. They expressed the emotions of the times, elaborated on the meanings of those times, and were whispered by the practitioners of the gossip of the times. Eventually a whole cadre of word-people began to find a way to live; not by hunting and gathering but by chronicling and critiquing the hunt and the gather. And that brings us to today.

The origins of the words you are reading right now come via the oft forgotten sacrifices of early man (people, humans, beings). That first terrified little fellow who brought down Barney and then had to rush home to tell someone about it (and found he had no language to do so) was the progenitor of people like George Will, Hillary Clinton and Mike Royko. His efforts to put words on deeds set in motion the Stephen Kings, Tom Clancys and Danielle Steeles of today.

And you thought words were just words.

Reel Thoughts

'Curdled' star shines in dark comedy

by Betty Jo Tucker

Angela Jones and William Baldwin do the tango in Reb Braddock's "Curdled."

How fitting that Miramax's "Curdled" should be released in early October — just in time to usher in the Halloween season. This disturbing dark comedy comes across as more dark than comedic, but then Quentin Tarantino is the film's executive producer, so you know it's not for the squeamish.

"Curdled," the first feature film by director Reb Braddock (who also co-wrote the screenplay with John Maass), is based on a 25-minute student film created by Braddock and Maass as part of their academic work at Florida State University. Tarantino ("Pulp Fiction," "From Darkness til Dawn") became interested in the short movie after viewing it at the Mystery and Suspense Film Festival in Italy.

As in the student film version, "Curdled" stars the remarkable Angela Jones ("Pulp Fiction") as Gabriela, a young woman fascinated by murder and obsessed about whether or not a severed head can talk. To get closer to real murders, Gabriela signs on with an agency responsible for cleaning up crime scenes after killings.

When the star and director of "Curdled" visited San Diego recently, I asked both Jones and Braddock about a scene in which Gabriela, through a haunting dance routine, re-creates a serial killer's (William Baldwin) latest gruesome murder.

"We mapped it out in the house first," explained Jones. Braddock added, "Then we just left it to Angela and the camera."

According to Braddock, this scene took seven takes — a higher number than usual for low-budget films. The result is well worth it, for everything in this unique scene fits together. Braddock admitted to making decisions about each detail, from Gabriela's gorgeous full-length dress to the suspenseful music. "I wanted it to have a lush, old world look — almost a fairy tale quality," he said.

Braddock hopes moviegoers will accept "Curdled" as a film that's meant to be fun, rather than scary. Unfortunately, I don't think this will happen because the film has too many terrifying moments.

"It's not so important whether people like 'Curdled' or not, but I want them to talk about it," Braddock declared. In my opinion, most talk about this movie will center on Jones' spell-binding performance. When I asked Jones was asked to name her favorite actress, she replied, "Jessica Lange, because she's always on the edge and you never know what she's going to do."

Jones' work in "Curdled" has this same edgy quality. I predict moviegoers will want to see more of this talented newcomer.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

The first of the 1996 presidential debates is history and, although I will not pretend to be unbiased, a little commentary is in order.

Bluntly put, Bob Dole did better than even his most ardent supporters had hoped, but nevertheless lost the debate. He lost because he did not hit a homerun. A good showing was not sufficient for his ultimate chances to unseat Bill Clinton, and he didn't come close enough to suggest that possibility. Clinton stayed calm, looked exceedingly presidential and made no memorable gaffes that could become haunting 30-second news bites or political ad fodder.

That said, the entire 90 minutes was polite, fact and figure filled and very much concerned with real issues. Later on, GOP analysts complained that Dole did not hit on such matters as Whitewater, character and political pardons, but these are no more the real issues than Dole's age, divorce or the abortion question. Other commentators decried the polite, nonconfrontational nature of the event and, perhaps overdosed on Geraldo and Ricki Lake, expressed the desire for some kind of blood-letting crossfire format instead. Of course, such formats usually produce lots of smoke and fire, but very little enlightenment and even less substance.

Dole surprised those unfamiliar with his sharp humor but probably didn't help himself with his almost continually dour and scowling face. Clinton, on the other hand, told no jokes but exuded sincerity and had, most of the time, a look of faint bemusement. Both men were highly articulate but tempted boredom by returning again and again to favorite and highly familiar campaign themes: Dole with his tax cut, youth drug use charges and the failed Hillary Clinton health plan; Clinton with his program of focused tax cuts, medical leave bill and bridge to the future.

For a few moments, I thought the gun control issue might produce real sparks, but Dole finessed it beautifully and left Clinton without much at which to punch.

Dole would often greet a question by going back and making comments on a previous question, as if he suddenly remembered good arguments he forgot to give earlier. Clinton, no matter what the question, frequently answered with a return to his program, even if it produced something of a non sequitur.

The bottom line, however, was that, while he may have solidified his own base, Dole did nothing to dig into his opponent's large advantage. He made no effort to speak directly to women in an attempt to lessen his damaging gender gap, and his belated tagging of Clinton as a liberal came across as a not-so-golden oldie.

Bob Dole did not stumble, mumble, fall over or do any of the other dreadful things some might have expected, but neither did he gain any ground. He has one debate and four weeks left. His is a great mountain for any political hopeful to climb.

Letters to the Editor

Constitution is cool

All the hoopla over the recent and ongoing campaigns about the presidential elections wasn't just about who will get into the White House, but about the pride Californians take on their contributions to American History — which was evident to both observers and participants taking apart in the annual commemoration of the signing of the United States Constitution in Old Town by various civic minded groups on Sept. 14, by the old and the young.

As an oldster of 85 years, I was proud to be able to participate as a member of the Women's Auxiliary of the U.S. Mormon Battalion Inc., honoring the original battalion members who marched in the longest infantry march in history, over 2,000 miles from Iowa to San Diego-during the Winter of 1846-1847 having been asked to volunteer in the war with Mexico.

In my pioneer outfit, I was privileged to have my picture taken with George Washington in his powdered wig and period attire of that day as he and others from the Scottish Rite group portrayed the signers of the U.S. Constitution.

George Washington, long one of my favorites, on Sept. 17, 1787, 209 years ago, as chairman of the Constitutional Convention signed this immortal document of government, along with thirty-eight others, and in one of his famous quotes stated:

"It is too probable that no plan we propose will be adopted; perhaps another dreadful conflict is to be sustained; if, to please the people. We offer what we ourselves disapprove.

How can we afterwards defend our work? Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the event is in the hands of God."

The Founding Fathers knew that turning over power to fellow citizens could lead to those chosen exercising force or control over others in areas not intended, that almost everyone could develop a love for power once placed in a position of trust, and so were placed by restraints of a written constitution.

Placing their own interpretation of the Constitution by those in power today is a growing danger we must be aware of, when we'll be exercising our right to vote.

Let "We, the people," set an example for all the world to see that we are proud of our heritage and country and the Constitution that made it possible.

CCT presents classic, 'Little Women'

"Little Women," an original musical production written by Robb Beus and Jon Lorenz, produced by Christian Community Theater begins today and runs through Oct. 27 at Theatre East, 210 E. Main St. in El Cajon. Performances of this new look at the classic story run tonight through Saturday and Oct. 18, 19, 24, 25 and 26 at 8 p.m. and Oct. 20, 27 at 1 p.m. Tickets are available by calling 588-0206.

Set during the Civil War years, "Little Women," Louisa May Alcott's semi-autobiographical story of a family with four daughters has been made into a movie several times. However, the four sisters, Jo, Meg, Beth and Amy, each with their own dreams and desires, have never been portrayed on-stage in a musical.

Director Robb Beus has adapted the novel and written lyrics for the original score by Jon Lorenz.

Beus has written scripts for CYT productions and tour groups, including an original script for "Prince and the Pauper." Also a performer, Beus' goal is to direct and he enjoys working with both children and young adults.

Lorenz, 22, a Grossmont College student, graduated from Christian High school and is a product of CYT's theater arts program.

Lorenz has written three musicals for Christian Youth Theater productions: "Aladdin," "Beauty & the Beast," and "Little Mermaid."

While the creative process is a great part of the fun, the real winners are those who can look forward to a future of more new shows by Beus and Lorenz.

In the words of Jo Marsh, "Sometimes I just feel that there's something out there that I'm missing, and if I don't explore it now, I may never get the chance to."

This young cat was found in Lemon Grove. She is playful, affectionate and very intelligent. She is temporarily named "Lucky" because she hasn't been taken to the animal shelter yet.
